

Answer at the End of the Line: Technical Conclusion

We could power the U.S., the most carbon intensive society on the planet, via carbon neutral techniques at a lower price than energy is provided now - allowing for population growth, and using existing technology. For economic growth over and above population increases, R&D potential in the field of alternate energy can more than match potential technical changes in other area.